GOOD PRACTICE EXAMPLES FOR MANAGING CONFLICTS OF INTEREST IN SPORT ORGANISATIONS

CONTENTS

Item 1.1	4	Item 6	12
Sport organisations should have published: a conflict-of-interest policy, which sets out its scope of application (e.g., to whom it applies); the procedures that should be followed; the different risks and examples of situations where conflicts of interest may arise.		There should be a systematic and regular process for declaring interests, including on an ad hoc basis whenever any change occurs to the nature and extent of those interests. A register should be kept and regularly updated by a designated person/body.
Item 1.2	6	Item 7	13
Within the process of awarding a major sports event, sport organisations have a published policy to manage conflicts of interest or the main conflicts-of-interest policy applies to national federations/ other entities which bid for events.		There should be a standard agenda item for assessing conflicts of interest at meetings in the decision process.
Item 2	7	Item 8	14
The conflict-of-interest policy should cover the concepts of actual, potential and perceived/apparent conflicts and provides clear actions to be taken.		There should be a person or body designated to provide advice, including confidential counselling, to persons confronted with conflicts of interest situations on what measures should be taken to mitigate them.
Item 3	8	Item 9	15
The policy should cover all types of relevant interests, such as financial, professional, political, business or personal/family interests, as well as provide clarity regarding nationality or institutional interest/loyalty.		Information about the conflicts of interest rules should be published also in the major sport event’s bid documentation.
Item 4	9	Item 10	15
The conflict-of-interest policy should clarify the difference between a conflict of interest and separate duties/loyalties in the event an individual sits in a representative capacity.		Training and awareness raising programmes should be provided to individuals about conflicts of interest.
Item 5	10	Item 11	16
When persons are in a situation of a conflict of interest, they should not participate in the decision-making process, nor exercise or appear to exercise any influence in the process.		Sanctions should be in place for failure to declare conflicts of interest, or for failure to follow corresponding rules/advice.

INTRO- DUCTION

A key element for ensuring the integrity of sport organisations and reinforcing their role of sport values' catalysts is their protection from corruption, which starts by ensuring the highest level of integrity in their processes. In this context, the development and implementation of appropriate conflict-of-interest¹ policies are essential to mitigate the risk that the processes are unduly influenced as well as to reinforce the public trust in the integrity of sport organisations.

In sport organisations, conflicts of interests may arise frequently. The existence of a conflict of interest is not an offence in itself. However, it is important that these organisations have rules and mechanisms in place to manage these situations and to avoid any inappropriate influence in the decision-making processes of the sport organisation, or the appearance thereof. Such standards shall apply to international sport organisations, as well as to national sport organisations, in particular when the latter benefit from public resources.

In 2017, the International Partnership Against Corruption in Sport (IPACS) set up a Task Force to address integrity issues related to the selection processes of major sporting events. As initial focus of the Task Force, it was decided to facilitate a common understanding amongst sport organizers, governments, and international organizations alike on the risks of conflict of interest situations throughout the selection process and how to manage them. The first report of this Task Force released in 2018 considered conflicts of interest situations which may arise in international sport organisations and proposed a number of recommendations to manage them based on a stocktake of existing practices in international sport organisations and international standards².

Building on this work, the IPACS Steering Committee asked the Task Force to elaborate a document supporting the implementation of the IPACS Task Force 2 report's recommendations through practical guidance, such as examples and tools, which could help sport organisations to put measures in place to manage conflict of interest situations.

For this purpose, the present document presents with a number of good practices and examples for each of the recommendations provided by 14 International Federations/sport organisations³, the High Authority for transparency in public life (HATVP), the Paris 2024 Organising Committee for the Olympic and Paralympic Games and the International Olympic Committee (IOC). The document also proposes a number of tools deriving from the work developed by international organisations for public sector organisation to the extent they are relevant and applicable to the context of sport organisations. The elements included in the following table are not exhaustive and have been selected for the sole purpose of illustration. In this sense, the list is intended to be updated on a six-month basis to allow sport organisations to propose the Task Force additional inputs relating to their current or future conflict of interest policies.

¹ At its simplest, a conflict of interest is a situation where a person has an interest that could improperly influence their judgement and decision making. Definitions from international instruments include the following:

"A conflict of interest involves a conflict between the public duty and the private interest of a public official, in which the official's private-capacity interest could improperly influence the performance of their official duties and responsibilities." (OECD, Recommendation of the Council on OECD Guidelines for Managing Conflict of Interest in the Public Service, 2003).

"Conflict of interest arises from a situation in which the public official has a private interest which is such as to influence, or appear to influence, the impartial and objective performance of his or her official duties." (Council of Europe, Recommendation No. R (2000) 10 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States on codes of conduct for public officials, 2000).

"Each State Party shall endeavour, where appropriate and in accordance with the fundamental principles of its domestic law, to establish measures and systems requiring public officials to make declarations to appropriate authorities regarding, inter alia, their outside activities, employment, investments, assets and substantial gifts or benefits from which a conflict of interest may result with respect to their functions as public officials." (UNODC, United Nations Convention against Corruption, 2003).

Sport organisations should have published:

- a. a conflict-of-interest policy, which sets out its scope of application (e.g., to whom it applies);
- b. the procedures that should be followed;
- c. the different risks and examples of situations where conflicts of interest may arise.

This recommendation is prioritized because it is aimed at regulating and thus, providing for any situation of conflict of interest that may arise in a sport organisation.

- Perceived conflict of interest: “A significant supplier contract was awarded to a relative of a FIFA team member leading to the perception from the outside world that favouritism occurred.”

[\[FIFA Compliance Pocket Guide, Conflict of Interest — p. 1\]](#)

TOOLS

- Conflict of interest definitions from international instruments¹
- Risk assessment methodology²

² A number of Conflicts of Interest policies distinguish real or actual conflicts from perceived conflicts. The latter requires a proper method to assess the risk that a situation is indeed perceived as a conflict. Perception is understood as the unbiased opinion of an independent observer with access to only partial information about a specific situation.

A standard risk assessment methodology can be applied to assess the risk of perception of a conflict.

The probability that a situation could be perceived as a conflict can be measured against its likelihood and impact, each rated for example from low, medium to high.

The likelihood of a perceived conflict affecting an Official can be conditioned to several parameters: 1) the relative importance of the secondary interest vs the primary interest (taken as the Official's role in the sport organisation); 2) the relative importance of the Sport organisation's decision over the Official's secondary interest; 3) public perceptions about the Decision and its importance; 4) the availability of information such as negative news coverage directly relevant to the Person's track-record and reputation.

The impact can be conditioned to the following parameters: 1) the degree of secrecy applied by the Sport Organisation's around its means and resources to detect, avoid and monitor actual conflicts of interest 2) the track-record of the organisation in genuinely enforcing Conflict Rules 3) the level of damage of conflict allegations over the decision 4) the constraints on the organisation to demonstrate whether there is any actual conflict in the specific case (source: World Athletics).

The policy should cover all types of relevant interests, such as financial, professional, political, business or personal/family interests, as well as provide clarity regarding nationality or institutional interest/loyalty.

It is necessary that the different types of conflict of interest be defined in the rules because this provides the concerned persons with clarity on the situations to which they should particularly pay attention.

The conflict-of-interest policy should clarify the difference between a conflict of interest and separate duties/loyalties in the event an individual sits in a representative capacity.

The distinction between conflicts of interest and other types of conflicts is vital for the determination of the measures that should be adopted in each of the different situations.

There should be a systematic and regular process for declaring interests, including on an ad hoc basis whenever any change occurs to the nature and extent of those interests. A register should be kept and regularly updated by a designated person/body. When possible, consideration should be made to making the declarations available to the public. Persons subject to declaration duties should be informed of their obligations and of the person/body to whom they should submit their declarations.

The rule is important to ensure transparency and to keep all the persons concerned updated on the current interests of the sport organisation's members and on the risk of a conflict of interest situation.
